

Digital Mental Health for High School Students

HOW CAN DIGITAL MENTAL HEALTH HELP?

High school can be an exciting time but it can also be demanding and stressful. As a high school student, you might face a range of issues such as bullying, friendship problems, relationship drama, family conflict, identity, sexuality, gender, body image and stress about assessment and study. These issues can have a big impact on you, and some young people can start to develop mental health symptoms such as anxiety and low mood.

Fortunately, help is available. You may be able to talk to your School Psychologist or Guidance Officer, but there are also other options.

Digital mental health services (programs or apps delivered online or over the phone) can offer you a free/low-cost and easily accessible option for mental health support, information and treatment. You can use the resources on your own (i.e., self-guided), with the help of an online health practitioner (if a program includes this), or alongside face-to-face treatment (if you're already seeing someone for help).
